

8.4 Amplifiers

In this section we find some tubes particularly intended to operate as amplifiers at very low-level signals, as those usually associated with many sensors, and anyway tubes used in electronic instrumentation.

Of special interest are electrometric amplifiers, tubes with very-high input impedance with grid current in the order of few atto-amperes (10×10^{-15} A)